The man who was shot and killed by a Reading police officer last weekend has been identified as Alan Greenough, 43, of Reading, reports the Middlesex District Attorney's office.

This remains an open and active investigation being conducted by the Middlesex District Attorney's Office, Massachusetts State Police assigned to the Middlesex District Attorney's Office and Reading Police. A full report will be released at the conclusion of the investigation.

At approximately 3:45 p.m. on Feb. 3, Reading Police responded to a Main Street residence in Reading for a report of an alleged assault involving a 43-year-old male and a household member. The reporting victim was no longer in the residence. Officers were familiar with the location and had responded Friday night for a reported altercation involving the same male. By the time officers arrived on scene on Friday the male had fled. Police searched the area and had been unsuccessful in attempts to locate him.

Upon arrival at this same residence officers located the male allegedly involved in the dispute inside the home, which was dead-bolted from the inside. Officers eventually gained access to the residence; however, the male had fled the home. Multiple officers subsequently sought to locate the male. At approximately 4:33 p.m. shots were fired by a Reading Officer wounding the male. The male was transported to Lahey Hospital where he was subsequently pronounced deceased. The officer was also transported to an area hospital, treated and released.
