OAKLAND >>Professional boxer Karim Mayfield said his Earth was shaken up, but it wasn't because of the recent earthquake felt in the Bay Area.

Through social media posts, Mayfield, 37, a welterweight, said that his little brother Shaleem Tindle, 28, of Oakland, was the man fatally shot by BART police officers Wednesday afternoon.

"My heart is aching right now, my little brother Shaleem was just murdered by BART police in West Oakland yesterday," Mayfield wrote on Thursday.

Since then, Mayfield, of San Francisco, has posted other photos on his Instagram account, including some of the two brothers when they were children.

"My Earth was shook b4 the earthquake last night," Mayfield said. "Rest in Paradise lil bra."

Police say that Tindle was shot about 4:41 p.m. by BART police across from the West Oakland station on the 1400 block of Seventh Street when he refused to drop a gun. Another man, identified only as an Oakland resident, had been in a struggle with Tindle and was also wounded. Oakland police, who are lead investigators in the case, said they are still trying to determine who shot him.

A woman who identified herself as Laquisha Stanley told reporters at the scene Wednesday night that Tindle had been arguing with the other man, whom she said was a friend of hers, and that Tindle was the one who shot her friend in the leg.

A pistol was recovered at the scene.

Besides Mayfield, other social media has been posted of the incident. One user on Twitter showed a video of the scene after Tindle was shot. He appeared lying on the ground as police handcuffed another man. A woman who seemed to know him, hysterical, appeared to try to give him CPR. The video, which was up on Thursday night by Ebrahim Aseem, has since been removed from his Twitter account. Aseem said his cousin had been shot.

The name of the BART officer has not been released, but police said he was wearing a body camera that captured what happened.

Mayfield participated in the Olympic trials for the 2004 U.S. team, and is the former North American Boxing Organization junior welterweight champion.
